"This is the largest natural disaster we've ever experienced," Hawaii Gov. Josh Green said at a Saturday news conference. "It's also a natural disaster that's going to take an incredible amount of time to recover from."

Live updates: Maui wildfires leave trail of death and destruction

Whipped by winds from Hurricane Dora hundreds of miles offshore, fast-moving wildfires wiped out entire neighborhoods, burned historic landmarks to the ground and displaced thousands. As searches of the burned ruins continue, officials warn they do not know exactly how many people are still missing in the torched areas.

"We are in a period of mourning and loss as we search for more people who are still unaccounted for," Sen. Mazie Hirono, a Democrat who toured the devastation, told CNN Sunday, adding Hawaii is in a state of "shock."

While the Federal Emergency Management Agency earlier on Saturday said it was premature to assign even an approximate dollar amount to the damage done on Maui, the governor estimated that "hundreds of millions of dollars."

Link Jason Momoa has issued a stark warning to anyone wanting to fly out to Hawaii - urging his followers to 'stay away' from Maui due to wildfires.

On Friday, the Fast X actor posted on Instagram to tell his fans "Maui is not the place to have your vacation" due to the severity of the situation.

"Do not convince yourself that your presence is needed on an island that is suffering this deeply," the actor wrote. The post received over 150,000 likes.

The post was originally created by the non-profit 'ina Momona', and showed videos and photos of the island. Momoa said: "The fires will have an "Island-wide impact on Maui's resources".

"Our community needs time to heal, grieve & restore," they also stated. "That means the less visitors on the island, the better."
